General Pershing Sends Report of Army and Marine Losses

122 KILLED IN ACTION

Many Officers Among Heroes Who Made Supreme Sacrifice for Country

Washington, Dec. 2.—General Pershing's casualty report for today comprises losses in the army and in the marine corps. The total is 890, of which forty-two were deaths of fighting men of the land forces and eighty "soldiers of the sea," the latter obviously comprising the record of more than a single day. A feature of the report is the large number of officers who made the last sacrifice for their country.

GERMANS STRONGEST WHEN FOCH ATTACKED

Retained Numerical Superiority, but Allied Commander Had American Reserve Constantly Growing. Struck When Foe Began to Weaken

By MAJOR GENERAL SIR FREDERICK B. MAURICE Former Director of Operations of the British Army

1917, the Germans had in France and Belgium 150 divisions, and by March 21 they were increased to 196. So they had brought over forty-six divisions during the winter from the Russian front. This re-enforcement made the German armies in the west numerically slightly, but not much, superior to those of the Allies.

These are all questions which it is now possible to answer with some approach to accuracy. The collapse of Russia enabled the Germans to transfer from the eastern to the western front between November, 1917, and March, 1918, more than 1,000,000 men, a large quantity of artillery and a large number of airplanes. At the beginning of November, our favor, the Germans were still considerably stronger than the Allies. But Foch knew that the steady flow of Americans into France would give him just such a reserve as Ludendorff had behind him in the spring, and this time the Germans had no reserve to call upon.

From July 18 onward the strength of the German army steadily declined. When hostilities ceased, the relative strength of the Allied armies was, roughly: Belgians, one; British, eight; Americans, six; French, ten. We may say, then, that from the time when our army took the offensive on August 8 up to the signature of the armistice it represented numerically about one-third of the Allied strength on the western front.

As an example of how much that one-third did toward the winning of the final victory I do not think I can do better than point to our share of prisoners taken on the western front during the campaign of 1918. These amounts for all the Allies in round numbers to 415,000, of which the British army captured 200,000.

Do It Now The Christmas Everybody's is one of the great numbers of the year. You will surely want it. A month ago you might have thought some of the leading articles "futures," but now they concern the things of immediate and vital importance.

Do not delay in getting your big, beautiful Christmas Everybody's. There is a shortage of white paper, the rulings of the war board make the publishing of a single extra or unnecessary magazine unpatriotic. The December Everybody's won't stay long on the newsstands. Get yours now—Better leave a standing order.
